

TIP OF THE WEEK

January 30, 2007

When I was teaching my daughter Beth to drive, the one image that sticks in my mind is mailbox after mailbox whipping by about a centimeter away from the right side of my face. After begging her to move just a tad closer to the center of her lane, I noticed she was hunched forward, shoulders tight, staring just over the hood of the car. I taught her to sit back, relax her shoulders and look further down the road, or she might not be able to see obstacles in time to react. You wouldn't drive your car looking directly at the asphalt whizzing by under your front bumper; don't drive your business that way either. Look ahead, get the big picture, and prepare for all those curves and potholes in the road.

Good luck. Work ON your business. Stay in touch.
