

TIP OF THE WEEK

May 15, 2007

I use a few web portals to find good information fast.

For news, I use drudgereport.com. It's not my brand of politics but they do have great links to all sorts of sources. In a few minutes a day, I can get a decent look at what's happening around the country and the planet.

I also like ceoexpress.com. This business portal has links to lots of sites – especially periodicals. I'll start there and click on a link that sounds interesting and read an article or two.

I regularly check out fastcompany.com to see what innovation and the future look like now.

If you find an article of interest, send the link to a customer or colleague with a note that they might like to read this too.

And then, STOP SURFING and go back to work.

Good luck. Work ON your business. Stay in touch.
